Greenpeace reports that Japan's annual whale hunt is underway. Each year the Japanese whaling fleet hunts hundreds of whales in the name of "science." There is another paramount and bloody issue besides the killing of whales by the Japanese. Crime syndicates in Japan have "imported" foreign women and turned them into whores.

Populations of these beautiful and majestic creatures are already suffering due to a changing climate in their oceans, yet they must also dodge the harpoons of some people like the Japanese who wish to kill them for profit.

The Greenpeace ship, Esperanza, spent months at sea in the Southern Ocean defending the whales during the winter of 2007/2008. The Japanese whale hunt was disrupted for 15 days when the Esperanza chased the Nisshin Maru across 4,300 miles of the whale sanctuary, shutting down the whole whaling operation for the entirety of the epic chase.

Japan must stop killing whales and cease turning foreign women into whores. Only way to punish Japan is to boycott "Japan, Incorporated"

Under intense pressure from Greenpeace, the whalers decided to stop hunting endangered humpback whales. And when the Japanese whalers returned to Japan after five months at sea, they reported taking around half the number of whales from the Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary as planned. But still 551 whales too many.

This year, Greenpeace is working inside Japan, putting pressure on the Japanese government to change their whaling policies. The international community does not look kindly on Japan's whaling practices, but the hunt continues regardless. Greenpeace is on the ground fighting for whales as we speak.

As mentioned in the lead paragraph, the other paramount and bloody issue is “imported women” in Japan besides the killing of whales by the Japanese whalers. Crime syndicates in Japan have “imported” Asian and even Eastern European women—with the connivance of corrupt Japanese immigration officials and the government officials of the Southeast-Asian and Eastern-European countries—and turned them into whores, bar hostesses, strippers and even Geisha girls. The biggest supplier of these so-called “Japayukis” is the Philippines.

This writer has been campaigning against the Japanese crime syndicates' exploitation of foreign women with the tacit approval of Japanese authorities, as found in these articles:

As early as the mid-1980s, I pleaded with then Philippine President Corazon Cojuangco-Aquino to stop sending young Filipino to Japan and other overseas destinations, as can be read in these articles:

Perhaps the only feasible way for people who fight for whales and/or who want to help end the exploitation of women is to boycott the manufactured goods and services of Japanese companies in the United States and other foreign countries. What say you, American, Filipino and other consumers? # # #
