The word “Itik” is the Filipino (and even the Bahasa-Indonesian and Bahasa-Melayo) term for a “duck.” Yes, Filipino Americans and the Filipino people must rid themselves of “human ducks” who quack (pun intended) like counterfeit journalists and/or fake lawyers, phony Ph.D. holders, etceteras, etcetera, ad infinitum.

Here is a write-up of a Filipino immigrant who likes to be called an attorney and posts online statements that he owns a “law office” in Los Angeles, California: “Marie Cherie, Espinosa’s wife, reportedly has recently left his (sic) husband to be with an American, Pex Aves, a Dipolog City native who is now a practicing lawyer in Los Angeles, told Sports Times on Thursday.” As copied from:

“Pinibili lang ng avocado at pagbalik ay abogado na” (he was sent merely to buy an avocado and when he returned, he was already an attorney) will soon become a Filipino humorous adage because of this writer’s and Romy Marquez’s ongoing exposés on fake lawyers in the Filipino-American community.

As now-coined by this writer, “grammaricide” is the deliberate and systematic destruction, in whole or in part, of the English language by a wannabe writer, irrespective of the author’s ethnic, racial, religious, or national background.

It is a case of a colloquial version of the legal maxim of "double jeopardy" when a fake lawyer tries also to become a bogus journalist. Here is what happened to Mr. Aves when he wrote to Perry Diaz, who posted it in his column without bothering to edit it (because he also does not know how):

"HOPEFULLY SOMEBODY OR SOMEONE FROM THIS GROUP WHO MAYBE HAVE A CONNECTION TO THE HIGH GOVT OFFICIALS OF THE PHILS. AND OR MAYBE PERRY DIAZ CAN VENTILATE THIS ISSUE TO HIS MEDIA CONNECTION IN MANILA SO THAT ONCE AND FOR ALL

AN INVESTIGATION MAYBE LUNCH." As copied from:

Mr. Diaz is another wannabe writer, who has also been accused of being a fake journalist. He did not mind Mr. Aves' suggestion of a "lunch," as in "an investigation (that) maybe (sic) lunch (sic)." Perry Diaz eats typos and "grammicide" for breakfast and more typos also for lunch and dinner.
